1970 All-Star Game Cards for HISTORY MAKER BASEBALL Big League Baseball Game

Here's your chance to re-live one of the most memorial all-star games in history--the 1970 match-up--with HISTORY MAKER BASEBALL Big League Baseball Game!

A number of things makes this a game not to be forgotten. It was the first big league All-Star Game ever played at night, and it was played at a stadium that was literally brand-new: Cincinnati's Riverfront Stadium had opened barely two weeks earlier! (When the game was scheduled, the stadium was still being built!) For the first time in over a decade, the starting line-ups were voted on by the fans--fan voting was suspended in 1957 after a ballot-box-stuffing embarrassment. In '70, fan voting was restored--with a series of safeguards put in place to ensure that no group(s) of fans would be able to manipulate the process.

It was a tense, exciting game. Fans were treated to three innings of pitching mastery by two of the game's best, Tom Seaver and Jim Palmer. The American League eventually built a 4-1 lead and held that lead into the bottom of the ninth inning. The AL brought in Oakland's Catfish Hunter to close it out, but he opened the inning by giving up a home run throw to San Francisco's Dick Dietz. Two of the next three batters (Bud Harrelson and Joe Morgan) got base hits, and Hunter was replaced by New York's Fritz Peterson. Peterson fared no better, giving up a base hit to Willie McCovey, scoring Harrelson, making it a one-run game. Mel Stottlemyre replaced Peterson, and Roberto Clemente's deep fly ball scored Morgan and sent the game into extra innings, 4-4.

But without question, the most-remembered moment of the 1970 all-star game was the way it ended. With two outs in the bottom of the twelfth inning, Pete Rose and Billy Grabarkewitz hit back-to-back singles to put runners on first and second bases. Jim Hickman then stroked a single to center field, and Rose was waved home. AL centerfield Amos Otis made a spectacular throw to catcher Ray Fosse, in time to tag Rose out. But Rose plowed into Fosse at home plate, jarring the ball loose and allowing Rose to score the winning run. Both players were injured on the play.

We've included umpire cards for the game's actual umpires, rated based on the '70 season. As you probably know, the all-star game puts umpires in the outfield, so we've carded them, too. The real-life assignments were as follows: Al Barlick (home); John Rice (first base); Frank Secory (second base); Bill Haller (third base); Frank Dezelan (left field); Russ Goetz (right field.) Don't forget, the game is played on artificial turf!
